Scientific Shorthand

Dictionary

Scientific Shorthand constructs the consonant outlines so they show the exact location of each unrepresented vowel sound, and gives exact expression to each initial long vowel and diphthong sound.

INTRODUCTION

The shorthand authorities of the world agree that all shorthand writing is and must be abbreviated writing. Systems of shorthand differ from one another largely in the methods of abbreviation employed by the different authors. The best system of shorthand, other elements being equal, is the one employing the best method of abbreviation. If, therefore, a system has been discovered that employs the best possible method of abbreviation, and such system is based upon an alphabet and fundamental principles applied thereto which the wisdom and experience of the entire shorthand writing world agree is the best possible alphabet, the logical conclusion is that such system is the completed solution of the entire shorthand writing problem.

The method of abbreviation recently discovered and employed for the first time in Scientific Shorthand is of universal application. It is as effective for the abbreviation of other languages as for the English language. IT GIVES THE GREATEST POSSIBLE DEGREE OF LEGIBILITY WITH EQUAL BREVITY, FOR EVERY WORD OF LANGUAGE. Just one simple, easily understood and applied rule governs the proper abbreviation of every word. No other method even approximates the scientific in simplicity, legibility and the rapidity of its application. Philologists agree that there is no other possible method of shorthand writing abbreviation, completely governed by a single rule, or which furnishes equal legibility with equal brevity.

The discovery of the scientific method affords conclusive proof that the shorthand writing experts are right, and always have been right, in stating that the geometric alphabet discovered by Isaac Pitman, or some modification thereof, is the most perfect possible alphabet for shorthand writing; because the scientific method of abbreviation can not be employed at all with any alphabet other than a geometric one.

The discovery of the geometric alphabet was the first great discovery connected with the possible complete solution of the centuries-old shorthand writing problem.

The discovery of the scientific or "Consonant Expression and Vowel Location" method of abbreviation was the second great discovery required to place shorthand writing upon a strictly scientific basis, and bring its mastery and practical application within the natural ability and educational range of people in general.

Scientific Shorthand being the only system that applies the scientific method of abbreviation to the geometric alphabet, and all rights to such basic discovery and its application being protected by copyright; and the system expressing the evolvement of rapid and accurate writing to the utmost possible degree of perfection, any world-wide standardization of shorthand writing must be based upon Scientific Shorthand.

During the past twelve years an attempt has been made to standardize shorthand writing for the English language. The work has been continuously in charge of a committee of leading experts, who have been aided and advised by a number of the most learned men of the profession. A prodigious labor has been performed. Much valuable information has been compiled, conclusions reached and given expression. In 1921 a small volume was published setting forth the findings of the committee. Those findings, in substance, are that the standardization of shorthand writing must be based upon a geometric alphabet; that "position" must be employed as an essential aid to both speed and legibility; that vowel sounds must be expressed by detached characters; that initial long vowel and diphthong sounds require exact written expressions, generally; that the most frequently heard consonant sounds should be erpressed by the most facile, most fluently joined, most rapidly written characters; that a number of the most frequently heard consonant sounds must have some secondary form of expression; that the vowel sounds, in rapid verbatim reporting, must be denied written expression, in order that even the most skillful writers may keep pace with the speaker; that it is far better to express all the consonant sounds and none of the vowel sounds than an equivalent number of both vowel and consonant sounds; that it would be a most unwise and prodigal waste of the all too-limited stenographic material to assign the most facile, the most rapidly written characters, namely, circles, hooks, and loops, to the orthographic expression of the vowel letters, because it is hopelessly impossible to give written expression to the vowel sounds, in all lines of rapid reporting; that such assignment of the very best of stenographic characters takes them out of constant use, and throws an unbearable burden upon the remaining characters.

Practically all the findings of the committee were known and long have been known to the educated members of the reportorial profession. Though no new or startling truths were announced by the committee in its published volume, and very slight modifications were made in the writing of the standard Pitmanic systems, the report has had the effect of making known that the wisdom and experience of the world's best thought and practice has no time for any system of shorthand, no matter how apparently popular with the ignorant and the impractical, due to well known causes of propaganda, that is not based upon a scientifically constructed alphabet.

To meet the endorsement of the Standardization Committee, as well as the approval of the entire stenographic profession, the standardized system must conform with well established fundamental principles, be based upon a geometric alphabet, and be capable of practical application in all the higher and more technical phases of rapid and accurate reporting without resort to all sorts of arbitrary, illogical, non-etymological, and impractical schemes of abbreviation.

Though the Standardization Committee recognized the serious defect of illegibility in Pitmanic shorthand as they sought to standardize it, yet the vastly superior speed qualities, and the scientific character of Pitmanic writing compared with the best of the non-Pitmanic systems, left no other choice of systems, as a working basis. If shorthand writing is ever standardized it will be, because it must be, upon a Pitmanic basis.

Unfortunately the Standardization Committee were unacquainted with the recent discovery of the strictly scientific method of abbreviation, and its complete application to the Pitmanic alphabet, which has removed from shorthand writing the basic defect of illegibility, materially reduced the time required to become a high-class court and convention reporter, and added from 10 per cent to 15 per cent to the speed possibilities of shorthand.

Official records of comparative merits of systems of shorthand are made at the annual conventions of the National Shorthand Reporters' Association.

"The National Shorthand Reporters' Association, after the contest in 1909, standardized the rates of speed and the method of deducting for errors, and the results in these contests are now recognized as the only authoritative records made in contests open to all writers of all systems, and not limited to members of a particular organization."

The official records show that no writer of any system of shorthand, prior to August, 1921, had ever qualified in a speed test dictated at 175 words per minute for five minutes, with less than THREE YEARS' study and practice; and no amateur had ever qualified in any test above 150 words per minute.

Therefore national interest was aroused in the announcement that two writers of the new Scientific Shorthand, just out of the schools of Minneapolis, wholly inexperienced as stenographers, would attend the Twenty-second Annual Convention of the National Shorthand Reporters' Association, to be held at Niagara Falls, the week of August 21st, 1921, to contest for the World's Amateur Championship, in the 150 word speed test, and also to qualify in the 175 word per minute professional tests, thereby demonstrating that Scientific Shorthand writers can attain a speed above 175 words per minute with less than ONE YEAR'S study and practice.

THE AMATEUR OR SYSTEM TEST

150 Words Per Minute.

The amateur contest for the world's championship is, more properly speaking, a test of the comparative merits of systems of shorthand represented from the standpoints of ease of learning and legibility. In such contest the publishers of the systems represented, see to it that their representatives are the best writers obtainable, and qualified to the highest degree of perfection, under the rules governing the contest.

The publishers and schools of Pitmanic shorthand, neglected or refused to enter any contestants against the two Scientific Shorthand writers from Minneapolis. The publishers of Gregg Shorthand (a non-Pitmanic system) entered nine contestants.

The rules governing amateurs permit the entrance of writers who have not previously contested or who are not professional reporters.

Taking advantage of this broad interpretation of what defines an "amateur," an interpretation which is so greatly to the advantage of any old system of nation-wide use for more than thirty years, and having more than one million writers from whom to make most careful selection, the Gregg Publishing company entered as one of their nine contestants a writer of thirteen years' experience, and another of six years' experience.

The publishers of Scientific Shorthand entered no objection whatever against the entrance of the two long experienced Gregg writers knowing that the overwhelming superiority of the scientific method would be demonstrated all the more conclusively in their defeat by the two student writers, one of whom had graduated from a Minneapolis high school just two months previous to the contest, and by the other, who had begun the study of Scientific Shorthand only 11½ months before the contest.

THE 150 WORD PER MINUTE TEST

The system test for the world's amateur championship was solid literary matter dictated for five minutes at the rate of 150 words per minute. The contest was easily won by Miss Alice Mengelkock, one of the Scientific Shorthand writers, with only FOUR errors in her transcript, a world's record in accuracy for an amateur writer, a record never until then surpassed by more than three or four of the world's most expert professional writers.

Within less than three years from the time Scientific Shorthand had displaced the Gregg system in the high schools of Minneapolis, it had brought world-fame and honor, not only to the student-writer, but also to the educational authorities who, heeding the advice of the court reporters of Minneapolis, had introduced the system on the publication of the first edition of the complete text, in 1918.

Miss Elnora Diehl, the other Scientic Shorthand representative in the contest, qualified with a less perfect rating. Only five of the nine Gregg writers were able to qualify in the 150 word test.

THE SEMI-PROFESSIONAL TEST

It is a well-known fact that highly talented, scholarly, long and thoroughly trained writers of inferior systems of shorthand can qualify, and have qualified in a 150 word per minute test. All that is required is the memorization and use of a few thousand word-signs, and specially devised characters for the most frequently recurring words and phrases, and such "trick" shorthand writers can enter contests at 150 words per minute, qualify, and frequently make creditable transcripts. Out of a million or more students, two or three may be found whose genius as shorthand writers permits the application of such arbitrary representation of words and phrases, even in the highest professional tests. But official records disclose that only the exceptionally talented and the long practiced can employ such device-character representation in any higher test than 150 words per minute. A higher speed test was therefore required to demonstrate the vast superiority of the scientific method of giving exact written expression and location to all the sounds of words over the older method of memorized word-sign, arbitrary, and unsystematic representation of words and phrases. Such superior test was found in

THE 175 WORD PER MINUTE TEST

The 150 word per minute test had eliminated four of the nine Gregg writers. Only five were left to contest with the two scientific writers in the 175 word test. The Gregg writers made a complete failure. They had reached their limit in the 150 word test. The method employed in writing above 150 words per minute broke down in the hands of the long experienced and thoroughly trained writers, even those of thirteen and six years' experience finding it impossible to represent words by arbitraries at the rate of 175 words per minute.

Both the scientific student-writers passed the 175 word test. Miss Alice Mengelkoch turned in a transcript of the 875 words dictated with only seven minor errors. She broke all previous records of all professional writers in the accuracy of her transcript. In fact the professional who had come nearest her record had 60 per cent more errors. Her heretofore unheard-of record of accuracy had demonstrated that Scientific Shorthand had removed illegibility from Pitmanic writing.

Miss Ehora Diehl qualified in this test with 97.6 per cent accuracy. She demonstrated that Scientific Shorthand is the most easily mastered system, not only for office work, but for all the higher lines of court and professional reporting. She had lowered the time required to obtain a certificate in the 175 word test from three years' study and practice to only 11½ months.

Scientific Shorthand, therefore, in its first contest with the old systems had broken all world's records in legibility and ease of acquirement. One other point of comparative merit remains to be demonstrated to prove conclusively that Scientific Shorthand is the completed solution of the rapid writing problem, and to demonstrate that a world-wide standardization can now be effected by the adoption of the system. It yet remains to be demonstrated that Scientific Shorthand is the most rapid writing system. This must be demonstrated in the professional tests. Such proof, however, will be forthcoming in the near future.

Having thus officially demonstrated the superiority of the scientific method compared with the best known and most extensively used non-Pitmanic system, the only question remaining for decision is: Shall Scientific Pitman Shorthand displace the older Pitmanic shorthand as changed or modified by the Standardization Committee.

The committee sought to evolve shorthand to a higher degree of perfection than any author or publisher had been able to accomplish. The work of the committee has been a labor of love born of a high appreciation of the value of standardization of shorthand writing.

But the committee failed in its most ambitious, most laudable, and much to be desired object. No system of shorthand embodying the committee's recommendations will ever be published, and if published, would fail of adoption in the schools of any English speaking nation. The committee found one great inherent basic defect in Pitmanic writing, recognized and deplored the defect, but failed utterly to remove it, in fact, made no attempt to do so. That defect is illegibility. Illegibility is the canker at the heart of Pitmanic writing, as given to the world by Isaac Pitman. The Standardization Committee not only failed to overcome or remove the defect, but made it all the more apparent—enlarged the defect in the severer abbreviation of the bare consonantal representation of words.

Notwithstanding the excessive speed qualities of Pitmanic writing; notwithstanding the fact that practically all the well-educated and highly skilled members of the reportorial profession are Pitmanic writers, and that the very few professional writers of non-Pitmanic systems admit the superiority of Pitmanic writing; notwithstanding the fact that Pitmanic shorthand is the only system that has evolved to greater and constantly greater perfection out of the world's best thought and practice, and become a world-evolved system, instead of representing the thought of any individual author (in nearly every case a wholly impractical person, but whose copy-right prevents any advanced additions or modifications of the system by practical writers thereof), the fact remains that there never would be a nation-wide acceptance of Pitmanic shorthand, much less a world-wide acceptance and standardization, until some plan or method has been discovered which removes the defect of illegibility, and makes unnecessary the many years of study and training to acquire a practical use of the system in the higher lines of verbatim reporting.

The committee's consonantal outlines of nearly four thousand words, a large majority of which are represented by abbreviated consonant outlines, do not give the reader the slightest clue to the positions of the unwritten vowel and diphthong sounds. Such outlines are very illegible They are read wholly as memorized forms for words and phrases. The same form of outline written in different positions represents different words. There is nothing in the use of position, however, that lends the slightest aid to legibility. The memorization and word association of the four thousand words recommended for standardization imposes an unbearable burden (now a wholly uncalled for burden) upon the minds, and time of students. It is the admitted illegibility of such outlines for words, short words as well as long words, that has furnished pseudo authors of non-Pitmanic shorthand systems with apparent justification in turning from geometrical writing in their vain attempts to discover some method that would overcome the illegibility inherent in Pitmanic or geometric writing.

It has been said, and wisely said, that all modern non-Pitmanic systems are protests against the illegibility of Pitmanic writing and the excessive time required to learn the same.

The Standardization Committee did not remove or even attempt to remove the defect of illegibility—a defect that is deemed so serious that Pitmanic shorthand has almost disappeared from the schools of America in competition with a comparatively worthless system. Therefore we have the anomalous condition of seeing an international school of shorthand thought and practice—a school composed of the world's greatest experts and educators, whose writers fill practically all the high stations in the reporting field—slowly but surely giving place to the impractical work of an impractical author. A noble profession brought low by merciless mercenary propaganda. Today in a large part of America the teaching field is occupied by teachers wholly incompetent to engage in any line of stenographic work, calling for office working speed with accuracy, and their graduates are as incompetent as themselves. Yet they have been led to believe they are doing their duty, that they are teaching a superior system of writing to the students under their instruction. All this sadness, this deplorable condition has resulted as much from the one great basic defect in Pitmanic writing, as from the skillfully organized and highly financed propaganda of the non-Pitmanic publishers.

The Scientific or Consonant Expression and Vowel Location method of abbreviation applied to Pitmanic writing has overcome the one and only serious defect in shorthand writing. If the real educators of America and the high-class practitioners of the "winged art" will now unite their efforts with ours, a world-wide standardization of Pitmanic writing can be realized, the schools of America can be reclaimed, the profession can be restored, the teaching and practice of shorthand in our schools can be placed upon a scientific basis, and students be given their inherent right to receive scientific instruction in shorthand writing, the same as in other subjects of a scientific character.

CONTRACTIONS

Scientific Shorthand abbreviates all words by giving written expression to the initial long vowel and diphthong sounds and the consonant sounds and exact location to the other vowel sounds. Though provision is made for exact expression of all vowel sounds, it is seldom necessary or even advisable to give exact expression to the vowel sounds, other than initial long vowel and diphthong sounds, except in the infrequently heard monosyllables composed of a consonant and a vowel, as pie, poe, pew, paw, of the p- group; doe, dew, daw, of the d- group, and in short proper nouns, as Eck, Ash, Ogg.

This fundamental method of abbreviating words affords sufficient brevity of outlines to meet the requirements of all ordinary uses of shorthand writing. But the practical experience of the shorthand writing experts teaches the absolute necessity of more severe abbreviation for a large number of the longer, more difficult, more infrequently used words. Such required abbreviation is obtained by writing only the primitive form of words for many of the derivates, relying on context to determine the proper word. Other words are abbreviated by dropping one or more of the consonant elements, and because the older systems do not locate vowel sounds, all such abbreviated outlines require memorization. Words thus abbreviated are termed contractions. Where the vowels are given exact locations in contractions, memory is not called upon to play such leading part, because the most severe requirements of contracting furnish forth outlines that suggest the respective words.

The author of Scientific Shorthand discovered that the slowest written strokes of the geometric alphabet, namely, K, G, and Qu, may be omitted in a large number of the longer words, in their medial and final syllables, without impairing the legibility of outlines, because the resultant outlines do not express and locate the sounds of any other words. Thus, dropping the k in production results in produshun, which is not the outline of any other word. Dropping the k in predication results in prediashun, which is not the outline of any other word. This rule applies even in words where those consonant elements occur more than once in the same word. Thus, dropping the k-l and the k in miscalculation gives mislashun which is not the consonant expression of any other word. Dropping both the g and the k in stigmatic gives stimati, which is not the outline of any other word. Taking advantage of this etymological fact, a large percentage of the words of this dictionary have been contracted by eliding the sounds of k, g and qu in writing medial and final syllables.

T and d, in final syllables, may be dropped from a number of the longer words, and ts, dz, in such final syllables may be expressed by s-z circle only. Thus abbrevia for abbreviate; abbrevias for abbreviates.

A broad general rule governing contractions is to elide the consonant or consonant sounds, the elision of which will give outlines that do not fully express other words. Where it is desirable to employ a contracted outline that does express and locate all the sounds of some other words of the same part of speech, a significant vowel sound should be written into the outline of the completely written word. Thus, expectation is expressed in contracted form by dropping the sound of k and t. Such contracted outline expresses in full the word expiation. Therefore, the vowel a should be written in expiation. The contracted outline for miscalculate is mislay, and therefore, the vowel a should always be written in mislay.

In general, the outlines of the words of this dictionary conform with the recommendations of the Standardization Committee as to the choice of consonants elided in contractions, except where the superior character of the system permits a briefer, more facile, more legible, and more rapidly written outline. However, where identical consonants are expressed for words, the Scientific Shorthand outlines give exact locations to all the vowel sounds orthographically related to the written outlines, and the "standardized" outlines do not give the slightest clue to the exact locations of any of the unwritten vowel sounds. Therefore, the Scientific Shorthand outlines are from fifty per cent to as much as one hundred per cent more legible than the outlines recommended by the Standardization Committee.

Scientific Shorthand has overcome "Positional Retardation" of the older Pitmanic systems, through a strictly scientific, vowel locational use of position. Scientific Shorthand has overcome "Illegibility Retardation" of the older system, through exact written expression of initial long vowel and diphthong sounds and exact location of all other vowel sounds. Scientific Shorthand has overcome "Phrasing Retardation" of the older systems, by subjecting phrase writing to a single rule that permits medial and final phrasing or joining of second position words but requires the phrase to end at any word that begins with a vowel sound.

Scientific Shorthand will be found not only the most easily acquired system, but time will as conclusively prove, officially, that from ten per cent to as much as fifteen per cent has been added to the speed of shorthand writers because of the elimination of the three sources of retardation above stated and the fundamentally briefer and more facile outlines of the system.
